Designing personal protective equipment implies an absolute responsibility towards those who use our products. It is for this reason that we are informing you of a recall concerning the quickdraw equipped with the Rocky Fil carabiner.

We have identified a defect in the riveting of the wire gate on some carabiners. This assembly defect can cause the wire gate to break and create a risk of the carabiner breaking in the event of a fall.

We ask you to immediately stop using this equipment.

To determine if your product is affected by this defect, we invite you to perform an inspection; full instructions can be found on the website. <https://simondrecallquickdraw.fandi.fr>

In summary, here is what you will be asked to do:

Check that the 2 sides of the wiregate remain securely attached to the carabiner. :

- Take the carabiner on one side, place your thumb between the two wires (thumb closest to the rivet). Press firmly down to the carabiner.

- Turn the carabiner over and repeat the same action on the other side of the wiregate.

If your product is not affected by this defect, you can continue to use it with complete peace of mind.

If, after verification, your product is affected by this defect, please do not use it anymore.

How do I return defective quickdraws?
